Alaska, the fever of gold

Alaska, "the large ground" in language aléoute, 49ème state of the USA, is large like three times France for a population of approximately 650000 inhabitants. 39 assembly lines, 17 of the highest North-American tops, 81 volcanos, including 40 still in activity, 3millions of lakes, 12 large rivers, 50 000km of coasts. Nature in its disproportion gathers disparate communities often completely isolated.

South in the North of Alaska, while passing by Yukon in Canada, the team of Is not necessary to dream traversed thousands of kilometers to the meeting of the natives and those which chose another life style in an area considered for its inhospitality.

On the road of the gold diggers, Alaska asserts its identity like its gigantism and remains still today a ground of pioneers.

REPORTS:

Yakutat: danger glacier!

A report of Amaud Blin and Daniel Brosset
 A production: France 3 Is not necessary to dream

With more than 100000 glaciers disseminated on its territory, Alaska is without question "the country of the glaciers". Following the climatic reheating, all move back, except one: the Hubbard glacier. A 120 kilometers length monster which advances so quickly that, by twice already, it closed the access of a fjord. Transformed into lake, its level then rose of 25 meters, threatening of flood all the economic infrastructures of a small village of 900 inhabitants: Yakutat.

The gold of Klondike

A report of Amaud Blin and Daniel Brosset
 A production: France 3 Is not necessary to dream

In 1897, thousands of gold diggers converged towards the Canadian Far North. Into a few months, they transformed a simple station of draft of fur into a town of 60 000 inhabitants, Dawson City. Today, 2 000 people still live in this city of tourism and gold. 100 years later, the fever of gold continues to prevail in Yukon.

Red tunics

A report of Arnaud Blin and Daniel Brosset
A production France 3 Is not necessary to dream

Their red uniform made the turn of the world. Today, they do not carry it any more but in the special occasions. However, faithful to a tradition which goes back to the XIX century, the gendarmes of the Canadian assembled police force always put a point of honor at being present in the most moved back regions. It is the case of Old Crow. In this village yukonnais of 300 inhabitants, only accessible by plane, three gendarmes make reign the law, while ensuring of the missions of public utility.

Kobuk 440: the great race

A report of Sandrine Leonardelli and George Pinol
A production France 3 Is not necessary to dream

All the small town of Kotzebue came to attend the beginning of Kobuk 440, the last race of the season before the snow melt. On the line: twelve teams of twelve dogs and the most famous mushers of Alaska. They will guide their dogs on 700 kilometers between snow and the sky. During three days, perhaps four, they will slip on the frozen rivers, will cross the tundra and will pass very close to the mountains: a long moment of intimacy with the dogs and nature, the last of the winter.

Pilots of bush

A report of Sandrine Leonardelli and George Pinol
A production France 3 Is not necessary to dream

In Alaska, there is a pilot for 58 inhabitants. They are as a red wire which connects the men to the men, the villages at the villages and the villages at the city. On this immense territory of a million and half of square kilometres, there are only 9000 kilometers of road. All that is not connected to the rest of the world by asphalt or the sea, it is the bush. With its plane Jérémie spends its time making jumps of chips between the villages of the edges of the Kuskowin river. It brings food, the mail, the passengers. In this area, some small airline companies divide the market. DaN, it, work "except track", as a recluse, for hunters, trappers... It is a truth "bush pile", one of these able adventurers, like the pioneers, to pose their plane where nobody was never posed.

Salmons of Kenai

A report of Patricia Micallef and Robin Teboul
A production France 3 Is not necessary to dream

The Kenaitze Indians are from now on Americans like the others they make their races with the supermarket and their mails are electronic. However, it is not so a long time, they nourished only salmon which they could fish according to their needs. Today, their children relearn to fish in an educational camp installed on the beach.

Caribous against oil

A report of Patricia Micallef, Arnaud Blin and Robin

Teboul
A production France 3 Is not necessary to dream

10 billion crude barrels sleeps under the ice-barrier in the basement of the last Arctic ecosystem of planet, then inevitably, the battle makes rage. Eaters of whales against hunters of caribous... the Indians are opposed. In Washington, the government dreams cause a drop in its imports of black gold. As for the tankers, they lorgnent on million dollars.

Nikolaevsk, small Russia

A report of Patricia Micallef and Robin Teboul
A production: France 3 Is not necessary to dream

Nikolaevsk is a strange place, born from the pile-up between Holy Russia of the XVII century and America of "Mac Do". At the end of a road, in this peninsula of Kenai, a collection of maisonnettes out of wooden, beiges and turquoises, a school, a post office and the two-tone bulb of the Saint Nicolas's Day church. Extraordinary odyssée that that of these Russians who, to continue to live like their ancestors, dissidents of the orthodox church, left their country at the time of the Revolution and were put in the search of a "promised ground".

The whale of Barrow

An account of William Garrit

Barrow, the greatest Eskimo community in the world, is a town of hunters of whales. In spring, when the ice-barrier is dislocated, the whales migrate towards the North Pole while passing to a few hundred meters banks of the town of Barrow. This traditional hunting is the most significant event of the year for Inupiat of the Far North of Alaska.
